STIRLING|MATTERS

News from Stirling's Parliamentary Team

'Fighting this dreadful disease has meant much hard work and sacrifice from businesses, workers and communities across Stirling. The news of additional restrictions across the Forth Valley area will be unwelcome, but are vitally important to slow the spread of COVID-19, and head off potentially tougher measures in the future. We've already come so far, and it's only working collectively that we can minimise the spread and save lives. Times may seem bleak, but this pandemic won't last forever. Our best days really do lie ahead.'

University prepared for COVID

Alyn has spoken to Central FM on the ongoing COVID-19 developments at the University of Stirling.

Campuses and students across Scotland have seen local spikes in infections, and are taking robust action to protect their staff, students and the wider community.

Speaking to University management and student leaders, Alyn is confident in the joint response being undertaken to reduce infections and keep people safe.

MP launches Covid-19 survey

Alyn Smith MP has launched a constituency-wide survey to Stirling households, asking their thoughts on the current Covid-19 pandemic.

Residents are asked to share their views on current events, and their hopes for the future.

The survey is available both online and in paper form, and aims to capture the views of the diverse communities that make up Stirling:

New restrictions vital to slow spread

Alyn Smith MP and Bruce Crawford MSP have called for the public to follow the newly updated health guidance, following increased restrictions for the Forth Valley Area.

Businesses and communities across the Stirling, Falkirk and Clackmannanshire areas will face tougher rules from Friday 9th October, aimed at slowing the spread of COVID-19.

Measures will be in place for just over two weeks.

Protections urged from 'hire and fire' practices

Alyn has joined parliamentary colleagues in calling for urgent action to tackle poor employment practices and pay cuts.

The UK Government has a responsibility to support businesses, and head off a jobs crisis. The undermining of pay and conditions only weakens the overall economy.

Cautious relief over TSB bank closures

Alyn and Bruce have expressed cautious relief that Stirling's local TSB branch will not be included in recently announced closures, but will seek further assurances for the long-term future.

Banking giant TSB recently announced the closure of over half of their Scottish branches.

Miners to have historic criminal convictions quashed

An independent review established by the Scottish Government has recommended that convictions stemming from the 1980s miner strikes should be pardoned.

Hundreds of former miners in the Stirling area are set to benefit, and local politicians have warmly welcomed the news.
